Performance Audit Services - January 2023

Background

This informational brief provides statistics based on our analysis of the Louisiana Department of Education’s (LDE) and federal data on the racial demographics of traditional public schools, charter schools, and private schools in Louisiana. We analyzed this data by breaking down the population of students by race and type of school attended. We used information from the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES), which was based on data from the US Census Bureau, to compare students to Louisiana’s population of school-aged children. To estimate the number of private school students and their racial breakdown, we also used data from the NCES.

WHAT WE FOUND

During Academic Year (AY) 2021-22, Louisiana enrolled an estimated 775,583¹ K-12 students in a traditional public school, charter school, or private school. Of these, we estimated that approximately 48.0% (371,937 students) were white, 37.8% (293,231 students) were Black, 8.6% (66,566 students) were Hispanic, and 5.6% (43,849 students) represented another racial minority.² Of the 658,118 K-12 students attending public schools, approximately 71% were considered economically disadvantaged.³ However, the demographics of the

Why We Compiled This Informational Brief

We conducted this review in response to a legislative request asking us to provide information on the racial demographics of charter schools in Louisiana. To provide a more comprehensive review of where Louisiana students attend school, we expanded this scope to include all public schools—traditional and charter—and private schools.

Informational briefs are intended to provide more timely information than standards-based performance audits. While these informational briefs do not follow all Government Auditing Standards, we conduct quality assurance activities to ensure the information presented is accurate.

² In order to ensure rounded percentages and numbers to sum to totals, we used the largest remainder method for rounding throughout the report. As a result, some figures differ slightly from the value they would have taken if typical rounding methods had been used.

individual schools attended by students of different races in Louisiana typically do not reflect these statewide statistics. When the demographics of a group of schools are not generally reflective of their collective average, there are higher concentrations of some demographic groups in some schools and lower concentrations in others. This is significant, because the US Government Accountability Office (GAO) found in a 2016 report⁴ that educational disparities in public education exist and are particularly acute in schools with the highest concentrations of minority and poor students.

Exhibit 1 shows how the demographics of Louisiana schools vary from the statewide average based on school type and student race.⁵ Additionally, due to the overlap between race and income in Louisiana,⁶ Black public-school students on average attend schools that are 79.9% economically disadvantaged, compared to 61.5% for white public-school students. Research⁷ has found that racially and economically diverse schools are associated with stronger academic performance for students. When schools are less diverse than the communities in which they are located, students may not be accessing the full benefit of this relationship.

⁷ The National Academy of Education found in its report titled “Race-Conscious Policies for Assigning Students to Schools: Social Science Research and the Supreme Court Cases” that in research dedicated to the subject “there is a relatively common finding that African American student achievement is enhanced by less segregated schooling” and that “there is a relatively common finding that White students are not hurt by desegregation efforts or adjustments in racial composition of schools.” <https://files.eric.ed.gov/fulltext/ED531144.pdf>. Additionally, the GAO found in the previously cited report that “schools with higher concentrations of students from low-income families were generally associated with worse outcomes, and schools with higher concentrations of students from middle- and high-income families were generally associated with better outcomes.” <https://www.gao.gov/assets/gao-16-345.pdf>

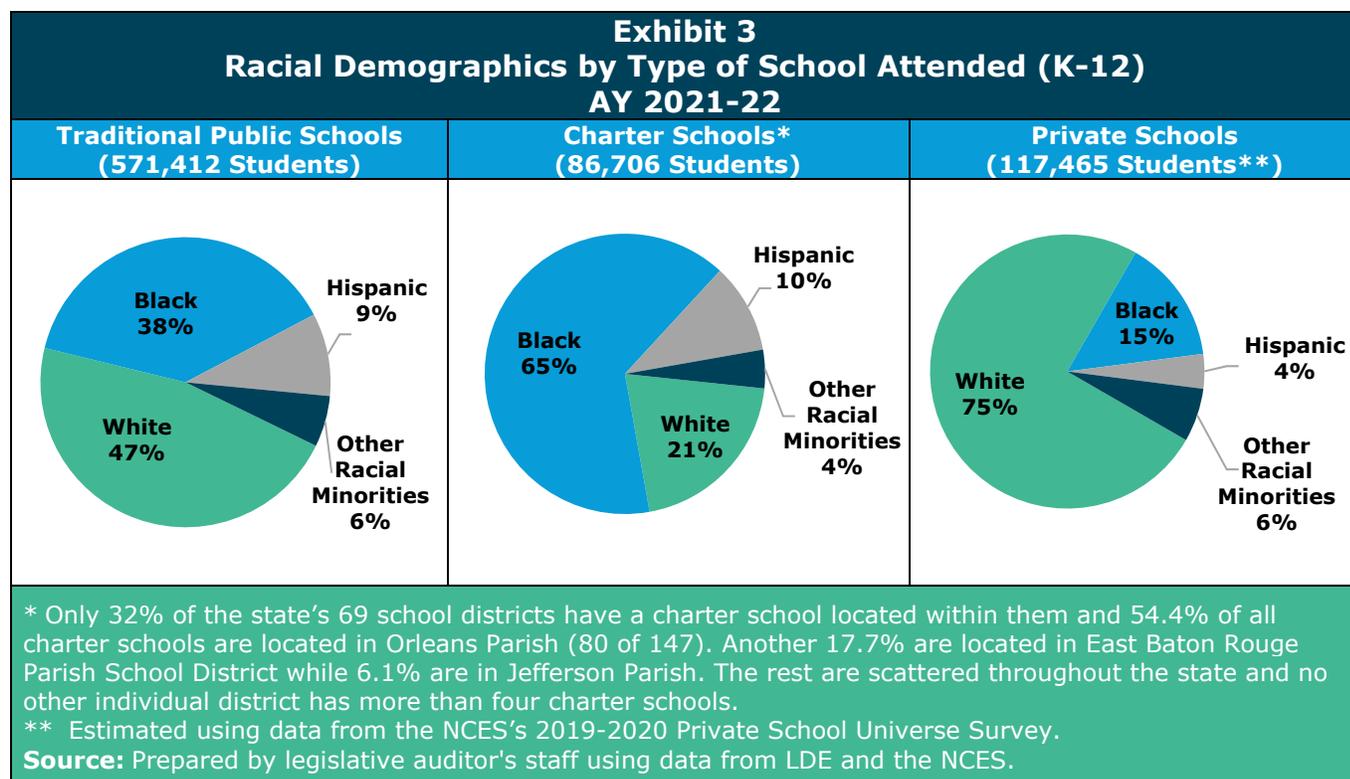

Most students of all races attend traditional public schools. However, white students are the most likely to attend private schools, Black students are the most likely to attend charter schools, and Hispanic students are the most likely the attend traditional public schools. Exhibit 2 shows the total students by racial demographic for AY 2021-22. Appendix A provides racial demographics detail for each traditional public and charter school, by district, including the letter grade of each school. Appendix B provides additional information on the racial demographics specifically for charter schools.

During AY 2021-22, of the students attending each type of school, white students made up the majority of private school students⁸ and the largest segment of traditional public-school students, while Black students made up the majority of charter school students. Exhibit 3 summarizes the racial demographics of students who attend traditional public, charter, and private schools.

⁸ According to data from the NCES, in AY 2019-20, 14.7% of Louisiana children enrolled in school in grades K-12 attended private schools, making Louisiana the second highest-ranking state in the United States, behind Hawaii. The District of Columbia also had a higher private school attendance rate in that year.

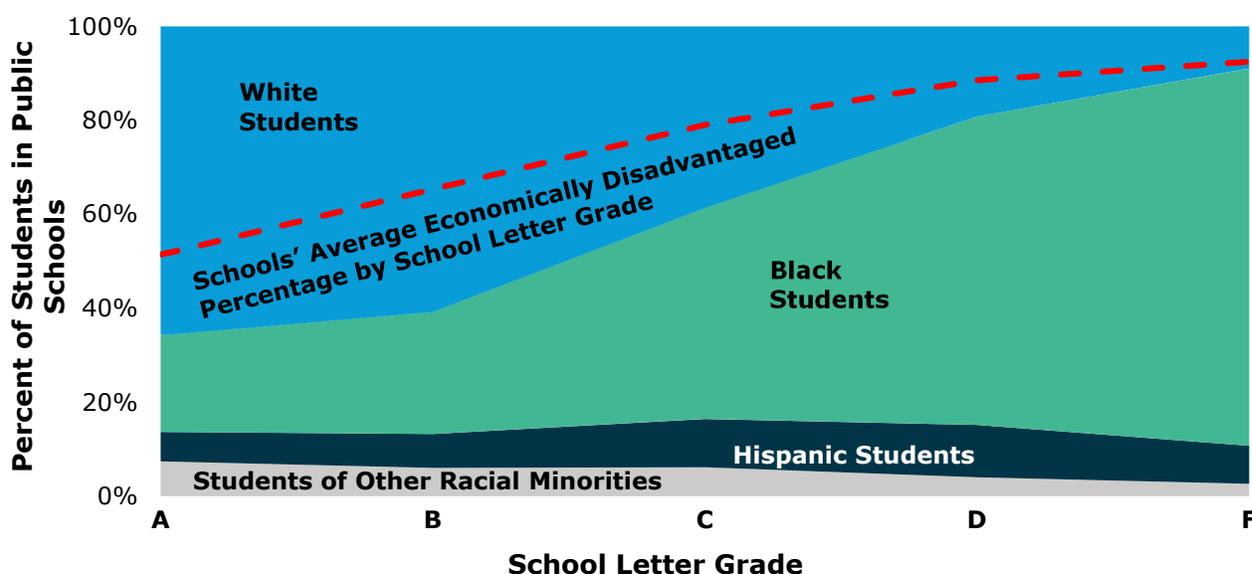

Black public-school students were more than five times as likely to attend D or F rated schools as compared to white public-school students. In AY 2021-22, Black public-school students, attending both traditional public schools and charter schools, made up the majority of the students enrolled in schools rated D and F.⁹ About 41% of Black public-school students attended a school rated D and F, while only 8% of white students did. Exhibit 4 shows racial demographics and economically-disadvantaged enrollment rate by school letter grade. As shown in the exhibit, the economically-disadvantaged enrollment rate has a negative correlation with academic performance.

⁹ Since 1999, the state has issued School Performance Scores for public schools, which are based on student achievement data. To clearly communicate the quality of school performance to families and the public, Louisiana adopted letter grades (A-F).

Of the state's 69 traditional public-school districts,¹⁰ 21 (30.4%) have minority¹¹ student enrollment that exceeds the percentage of minority children who live in the district by more than 10 percentage points. There are no public-school districts in which white students exceed the percentage of white children who live in the district by more than 10 percentage points. When a racial group makes up a larger share of a district's enrollment than of the population of school-aged children who live in it, that group is overrepresented. When they make up a smaller percentage, they are underrepresented.¹² Over and underrepresentation of different racial groups may mean that schools are less diverse than the communities in which they are located.

¹² For example, if a district's total enrollment is made up of 80% minority students and 20% white students, but the district has a population of school-aged children who live there that is 60% minority and 40% white, that district has minority enrollment that is 20 percentage points overrepresented relative to the population. Conversely, the district has white enrollment that is 20 percentage points underrepresented.

Louisiana's public-school districts have minority student enrollment that is, on average, overrepresented by 7.3 percentage points. The highest district has minority student enrollment that is 26.6 percentage points above the population, while the lowest district has minority student enrollment that is underrepresented by 3.9 percentage points.
